SATURDAY, JANUARY 22, 1878.

The Weather We Are to Have. A rival of Prof. Tice has appeared in the person of an aged citizen of German birth, named Henry Kroeger. Mr. Kroethe west fifty-one years. He can neither read nor write, but can observe things and put them together, and has a memory like an encylopædia. After running over the past fifty-one years with his mind's eye, Mr. Kroeger in September last glanced into the future and prophesied thus: "After this next moon shows the last bit of its face, we shall have the most beautiful autumn we have had for many years. Early in November there will be some cold days, but it will be mild a nice board. and pleasant during the most of the month and until the 20th of December. when the streams will freeze, but only a thin sheet of ice will be formed. In January we shall have the finest Indian summer we have had since 1856, and there will be only a few cold days. During the winter there will be more rain than snow, and little or no sleighing. There will be a few cold days in February. March will be dry, cloudy and warm. The weather in April will be variable, cold and warm alternating. In May it will be dry, and gardeners will find it necessary to water their plants." Mr. Groeger, who seems to take a true German interest in beer, advises brewers to lay in ice at the first opportunity, or they may have to send to

V. P. Collier, of Battle Creek, (an old resident of that city and its present mayor, well known as State Treasurer for four years) recollects when the cashier of this "wild cut" bank was in the habit of leaving the banking office about the time when the stage coach was due, and ramaining away until advised that the passengers who came in the stage had departed with it. Then he would return and reopen the bank for business, assured demption or exchange. This bank had a nominal capital of $100,000, and its bil's bear the double inscription of " Michigan and private property holden;" yet there is no evidence in the state documents that it ever owned a dollar of specie.
